A Labour Party review of defence policy is a chance to influence debate. Whether you’re a Labour member or not, your views are welcome.

Those who oppose militarism, nuclear weapons or the UK’s support for authoritarian Saudi Arabia are often accused of jeopardising the UK’s national security. However, the current approach to security, including military intervention overseas, has fuelled the very threats it purports to tackle while neglecting the root causes of insecurity, such as climate change and inequality.

The Labour Party

The Conservative Government’s 2015 National Security Strategy and Strategic Defence and Security Review prioritised arms sales and spending on expensive vanity projects, such as Trident and aircraft carriers. Now the Labour Party is undertaking its own Defence Review and is inviting everyone, whether a party member or not, to contribute by 30 April.

The Review document can be found at yourbritain.org.uk/defencereview. It poses a series of questions about the UK's place in the world, threats to security, military spending, nuclear weapons, the arms trade and protecting the jobs and skills of arms industry workers.

CAAT has a briefing to help with responses to the Review, as well as other materials including a draft motion for Labour Party branches. The briefing is online at caat.org.uk/real-security. If you do not use the internet, CAAT can send the materials by post.

The trade unions

The labour movement has traditionally supported jobs and peace. However, as Labour undertakes this review, both Unite and the GMB are campaigning hard to preserve existing arms industry jobs. They aren’t questioning the massive waste of resources involved.

As Labour undertakes this review, both Unite and the GMB are campaigning hard to preserve existing arms industry jobs

Research shows that more and better jobs could be provided if the subsidy currently enjoyed by the arms industry was switched to the renewable energy sector. Since energy security and climate change are acknowledged threats to security, it would seem a win-win situation to use the skills of current arms industry workers to address this.

If you belong to Unite or the GMB please ask your union leaders to think again, to investigate and support the alternatives to arms industry jobs. Contact
- Len McCluskey, Unite – len.mccluskey@unitetheunion.org
- Tim Roache, GMB – tim.roache@gmb.org.uk

Background information and a motion for trade union branches can be found at caat.org.uk/get-involved/unions.

Again, if you’re not online please contact the CAAT office for materials.

CLYDE JOBS CASE STUDY

To complement CAAT’s report on jobs, Arms to Renewables: work for the future, there is now a regional case study, Arms industry in the Clyde & renewable energy options. This finds that the several thousand jobs that could be created in the wave and tidal industries in the Clyde would more than offset job losses from reduced UK military spending and arms exports. Both reports are free of charge and can be ordered from the office.
Canada’s recently elected Liberal Party government is continuing with the previous administration’s multi-billion dollar armoured vehicle deal with Saudi Arabia, despite concerns about human rights abuses in the country. The Canadian foreign minister said the process by which contracts are assessed would be reviewed in future.

Saudi Arabia has said it will keep French military supplies it bought with the intention of sending them to Lebanon. The change of mind over the Saudi-funded $3bn aid package to the Lebanese Army is due to concerns about Hezbollah’s support for the Syrian regime and influence over decision-making in Lebanon.

Defense News, 19/2/16 & 6/3/16

The peace research institute SIPRI has released new data on the arms trade, finding that the US is the world’s biggest exporter, well ahead of Russia. Next comes China, which doubled its arms exports in 2011–15 as compared to 2006–10.

The main customers are in Asia and the Middle East: India topped the list, followed by Saudi Arabia. 14 per cent more arms were exported worldwide in the last five years than in the preceding five.

DW.com, 22/2/16

France is said to have signed arms export contracts worth a record €16bn in 2015. The figure was driven by the sale of 48 Rafale fighter jets to Egypt and Qatar. Sales to Asia came second after sales to the Middle East.

Defense News, 15/1/16

The UK’s minister for defence procurement led a high level delegation to an arms fair in Singapore in February. While he was there he also announced interest in stronger military ties with the country. UK-based companies also attended the Singapore Airshow.

March was a busy month for the UK arms industry, with two arms fairs taking place.

SECURITY AND POLICING: THE HOME OFFICE’ S FESTIVAL OF REPRESSION

The secretive Security and Policing arms fair brought governments, police forces and military delegations from around the world together with arms companies supplying weapons and other equipment used for repression and surveillance. Held in March at the Farnborough air base, it was marketed as a “discreet environment” to “display products which would be too sensitive to show in a more open environment.” The UK government’s arms export body was responsible for officially inviting international delegations. The invite list included Saudi Arabia, Israel, Bahrain, Turkey and Mexico.

Campaign presence
CAAT joined a wide range of groups including the Network for Police Monitoring, Global Justice Now, Lesbians and Gays Support the Migrants and Stop the Arms Fair for a protest outside the Home Office (pictured) to call for an end to the fair. People with firsthand experience of torture, state surveillance and repression shared their stories and candles were lit to remember those killed by the governments or companies attending Security and Policing.

What security?
Heavy policing of borders, militarisation of police, increased surveillance of civilians and high military spending do not improve security, they make the world a more dangerous place.

Candles were lit to remember those killed by the governments or companies attending Security and Policing

STOP CARDIFF ARMS FAIR PROTESTS CAUSE HAVOC FOR ARMS DEALERS

Meanwhile, in Wales, Stop the Cardiff Arms Fair was also busy giving arms dealers the runaround at the Defence Procurement, Research, Technology & Exportability arms fair (DPRTE). Cardiff commuters awoke to spoof adverts for the arms fair at bus stops all over town. A rooftop occupation of the Motorpoint Arena alongside a lively demonstration outside caused havoc for the arms fair’s organisers.

DPRTE takes place at the Motorpoint Arena in Cardiff and exists to let smaller arms companies meet bigger buyers. The fair relocated to South Wales in 2014 after it was driven out of Bristol by demonstrators.

Campaigners had already succeeded in getting artists performing at the Cardiff Arena to speak out against it. Punk-ska band The King Blues even denounced it while live onstage at the Arena. A day of creative action with food, music, dancing and games outside the Motorpoint Arena meant that the arms dealers found no welcome for them in Wales either! You can read more about the Stop Cardiff Arms Fair protests on the CAAT blog.

People in England and France are gearing up to challenge two major arms fairs taking place this summer: Eurosatory in Paris and the UK’s Farnborough Air Show.

FARNBOROUGH AIR SHOW: 11–17 JULY

Farnborough International is best known for its family-friendly weekend airshow, but most of the world’s major arms companies have a presence during the week, exhibiting a range of weaponry.

Farnborough takes place every two years, alternating with the DSEI arms fair in London. In 2014, activists held a vigil outside the fair and targeted the arms dealers’ gala dinner at the Science Museum in London (pictured below). Some delegates were turned away from the event and the Bahraini delegation fled when they were confronted by activists.

After attending Farnborough in 2014, CAAT’s campaigns coordinator Sarah Waldron wrote: “It was the most surreal and chilling day... I stood by the glossy stands of Israeli arms companies, promoting ‘battle-tested’ weaponry with slick videos of missile strikes and drone attacks. While outside, in the real world, the death toll in Gaza mounted. I came face-to-face with a member of Bahrain’s royal family as he was ushered into BAE’s display area to browse its warplanes. I thought of the Bahrainis I have met in London – shot, imprisoned, tortured and exiled by their government because they dared to call for democracy.”

Taking action

There will be lots of opportunities to take action against Farnborough and on Sunday 10 July CAAT is hosting an international anti-arms trade gathering in London. Contact Sarah Reader at action@caat.org.uk or call 020 7281 0297 to book a (free) place.

EUROSATORY ARMS FAIR: 13–17 JUNE

Eurosatory is one of the world’s largest arms fairs and takes place every two years in Paris. A coalition of European groups is preparing to take action: see pasdesalondelarmementaparis.fr.

Plans include:

- 12 June: action briefing (in English)
- 13 June, noon: blockade of the Eurosatory venue, Paris Nord Villepinte
- 14 June: mass action at the arms fair dinner

On 8 March Campaign Against Arms Trade began formal legal proceedings against the UK government over its arms exports to Saudi Arabia.

The focus of our case is Saudi Arabia’s use of UK weapons in Yemen, which it has been bombing since March 2015. The Saudi-led attacks – using UK-made warplanes and UK-made bombs – have hit refugee camps, schools, hospitals, a wedding and aid facilities. Air strikes killed more than 100 civilians in February alone. There is overwhelming evidence that these attacks have repeatedly breached international humanitarian law.

Licences

UK arms export rules say that a licence for military equipment should not be granted if there is a clear risk that it might be used in violation of international humanitarian law – but the UK government has continued to allow weapons sales. It licensed an astounding £2.8 billion of weapons sales to Saudi Arabia in the six months after the bombing started. This is in clear violation of the UK’s own rules and of European and international law. It makes a mockery of the Government’s claims to “rigorously” control arms exports.

Of course, the UK should never have been arming authoritarian Saudi Arabia in the first place. Saudi Arabia executed 47 people in a single day at the start of 2016; it’s a country that flogs bloggers, that represses women and minorities, and that helped crush democracy protests in Bahrain (see page 13).

For decades, successive UK governments have prioritised arms deals with Saudi Arabia over human rights, and made us complicit in this regime’s crimes. Now though, this relationship is under the spotlight like never before. In February, Parliament’s International Development Committee called on the Government to suspend arms sales and support an independent inquiry into Saudi Arabia’s indiscriminate bombing. Then, after thousands of us wrote to our MEPs, the European Parliament voted by 359 votes to 212 for an immediate arms embargo to Saudi Arabia.

Thank you to those of you who emailed your MEPs asking them to support the resolution. This helped ensure that it passed despite strong Saudi lobbying in opposition.

Meanwhile, back in the UK, Parliament’s Committees on Arms Export Controls, the group of MPs that scrutinise UK arms exports, has finally reconvened. In March the committee announced a full-scale inquiry into UK arms sales to Saudi Arabia.

It’s vital that we now keep up the pressure.
HUMANITARIAN CATASTROPHE IN YEMEN

80% of the population require humanitarian assistance

2.4 million people have been forcibly displaced

14 million people are facing food insecurity

1.4 million children are acutely malnourished

Over 2,000 children have been killed or injured

“The scale of human suffering is almost incomprehensible”

JOIN THE CAMPAIGN

Spread the word

- In April CAAT will publish a new report on the UK’s shameful relationship with Saudi Arabia. Order a copy and campaign postcards by emailing enquiries@caat.org.uk or calling the office.
- Please keep sharing our online petition to stop the arms sales at caat.org.uk/stop-arming-saudi.

Lobby your MP

- Whoever your MP is, we need them to know that the UK is complicit in Saudi Arabia’s crimes – and to share their constituents’ concerns with the Government.
- If they can, we need them to show their support by signing EDM 1170, a parliamentary petition calling for an embargo on arms sales to Saudi Arabia. You can find a template email to send in two minutes at caat.org.uk/stop-arming-saudi.

Target your local arms company

- Expose the arms companies on your doorstep to raise awareness of UK complicity in Saudi Arabia’s crimes and to make it harder for the arms companies to go about their deadly business.
- More than 80 companies at more than 400 locations in the UK have applied to export military equipment to Saudi Arabia. Find them all – from Raytheon in Glasgow to MBDA in Stevenage – on CAAT’s company map and learn about how they’re supporting Saudi’s aggression and human rights abuses: caat.org.uk/stop-arming-saudi.

Go to the BAE AGM

BAE’s sales to Saudi Arabia include the Typhoon and Tornado combat aircraft that are being used to bomb Yemen, and the Tactica armoured vehicles used by Saudi Arabia in Bahrain to help suppress democracy protests. Join us at BAE’s Annual General Meeting on Wednesday 4 May to hold the company to account. For more info see page 12.

Attend Farnborough

Farnborough International is a major UK arms fair. It takes place every two years, with the next event this July. The UK government always invites Saudi Arabia to send a military delegation to the fair, where weapons from most of the world’s major arms companies are available to browse. Read more on page 7 about how you can get involved in protests.
Evidence mounts that UK-made weapons – planes manufactured by BAE Systems and promoted by the UK government in multi-million pound arms deals – are being deployed by a brutal government attacking a civilian population. The UK government refuses to act. Instead it denies the evidence and continues to license weapons sales. This will sound depressingly familiar to anyone following the story of UK support for Saudi Arabia today (see pages 8 and 9). However, the same situation was in place twenty years ago, when ten women disarmed a war plane committed for sale to Indonesia, and likely to be used against the people of East Timor. The full story is told for the first time in The Hammer Blow, written by Andrea Needham and published in January.

The action
In January 1996 Andrea was one of a group of women who cut through a fence in the middle of the night and entered a British Aerospace hangar at Warton in Lancashire. Once inside they used household hammers to cause an estimated £1.5 million worth of damage to a Hawk jet war plane, before calling security themselves. Four were charged and spent six months in prison awaiting trial.

East Timor
The Hawk jet the women had disabled was being prepared for export to Indonesia, which was occupying East Timor. Over a third of the population had been killed since its invasion in 1975. The UK government could be in no doubt about evidence that showed that Hawk jets were being used against East Timor’s civilian population. Alongside thousands of others, the women who took action at Warton had written letters, signed petitions, handed out leaflets, marched, attended rallies, organised peace camps and taken part in nonviolent direct action. Still, the UK government refused to act and sales continued. Andrea says: “In that situation, with our Government aiding and abetting genocide, what else could we do but disarm the weapons ourselves?”

Verdict
In July 1996, in a historic verdict, a jury in Liverpool acquitted all four women, finding they had acted reasonably to prevent a greater crime.

Andrea’s book tells the full story of the action, from its meticulous planning and audacious execution, through the challenges of preparing a case while imprisoned, the tireless work of the wider support team outside, to the trial itself. It’s a gripping story of a remarkable action, one with particular resonance and relevance today.

Be inspired by ordinary people prepared to take action and personal risk and learn from a practical case study in effective resistance.

In January the National Union of Students (NUS) published two reports, one about universities’ unethical investments and research and the other about university student and staff attitudes to unethical investments and research.

The reports revealed a lot of info on the amount that universities invest in arms companies, but also the level of opposition from students and staff. UK universities have millions of pounds invested in arms companies and do millions of pounds’ worth of research for them each year.

55% of respondents said universities should avoid research into arms/munitions.

61% of respondents said that universities should avoid investment in arms/munitions.

85% of HE staff who responded said arms/munitions should be avoided by pension schemes.

Student-led Stop Arming Israel campaigns are growing, with lots of wins along the way. Liverpool University Guild of Students and UCL Student Union both recently adopted Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions policies that include arms. This means they now have a mandate to lobby their universities to cut all ties with arms companies that supply Israel or collaborate with Israeli arms companies.

Meanwhile, students across the country marked Israeli Apartheid Week in February and seized the opportunity to raise awareness of universities’ support for the arms industry, hosting speaker events, workshops and film nights. Campaigns were launched at several universities to end arms company recruitment and research at universities.

Saudi Arabia, the country that executed 47 people in a single day at the start of 2016, that flogs bloggers, represses women and minorities, is “a good ally to be worked with” and “an important customer” according to the arms company BAE Systems. BAE fighter jets, including the Eurofighter Typhoon, are being used in the Saudi-led bombing of Yemen.

The Government’s proposal to ban ethical boycotts is an attack on local democracy.

The Government may talk about support for local decision-making but its proposal to ban councils and public bodies across England from boycotting unethical companies flies in the face of such rhetoric.

The media has focussed on the potential of such legislation to curb ethical procurement decisions and stop the Boycott, Disinvestment & Sanctions campaign against Israel. However, the issue goes even wider than that.

The Government is also seeking to stop councils from boycotting arms companies because that would “risk harming Britain’s export trade.” In other words, central government believes that arms company profits are more important than local democracy. Boycotts can work. From the 1960s to the 1980s over 100 local authorities banned South African goods from offices and schools. By 1985, two thirds of the population lived in local authorities that supported the anti-Apartheid movement.

At present the rhetoric may be limited to scaremongering about the impact of Israeli boycotts and disinvestment in arms companies, but in the long run these proposals could impact on almost all campaign groups.

Councils are meant to be free to make their own decisions when it comes to representing local people. Surely, if the Government really believes in empowering councils then it should allow local people to decide where their money is spent?
Several people are due to be in court from 11-15 April for taking action against the DSEI arms fair. They were arrested during the week of action, which saw daily blockades of vehicles and equipment destined for the fair.

The group released a statement saying:

“While we find ourselves due to stand trial for opposing the DSEI arms fair, we invite you to question why it is us – and not the war makers and profiteers – that are on trial.”

What you can do:

Why Stop Arming Israel?
In 2014 UK weaponry was once again used by Israel in a devastating assault on Gaza. 2,205 Palestinian civilians were killed in 51 days, 521 of them children. Yet in the following four months the UK government went on to approve £4 million worth of arms sales to Israel.

“The Big Ride is an initiative by supporters of the Palestinian people which combines a love of cycling with practical solidarity and awareness raising”

What’s happening?
There will be four organised rides over one long weekend leaving from London, Manchester, Bristol and Sheffield to converge in Birmingham for a Sunday afternoon of music and other entertainment, food, stalls and speakers from the Palestine solidarity movement. The ride will end on Monday with a mass cycle ride of about 18 miles to the final destination in Shenstone, Staffordshire.

Why Shenstone?
The cyclists will head to a Shenstone arms factory called UAV Engines, which is owned by Israeli arms company Elbit Systems. Elbit Systems is Israel’s biggest private arms company and the factory in Shenstone makes drone parts that are then exported all over the world. The factory has already been the target of mass protests. There’ll be a rally outside calling for the UK to stop arming Israel.

Dermot MacWard, director of the Red Spokes tour company and one of the organisers of the Big Ride, explains how he and his cycle tour company came up with the idea for the ride: “The Big Ride is an initiative by supporters of the Palestinian people which combines a love of cycling with practical solidarity and awareness raising. In 2015 we were motivated to organise a marathon 450-mile, nine-day cycle ride from Edinburgh to London, involving more than 200 participants and supporters. In 2016, we are again setting out on the road for Palestine solidarity.”
